REVVED FOR GROWTH Referral Partner Guide

What to listen for, why Jason, and how this runs both ways.

The client that fits

- Founder-led or family-owned B2B, roughly $2M to $15M in revenue.
- Growth isn't tracking to what the founder expected, despite new people, tactics, or tools.
- The stall keeps changing costume: it looked like a marketing problem, then a sales-hire problem, then a tools problem, and the number never moved.

What you'll hear

You don't need to diagnose anything. If you hear any of these, the introduction is worth making.

From the founder:

- "We're not growing as fast as I expected."
- "I'm still the best salesperson in the company, and I don't have time to sell."
- "I don't know why we can't hit our targets."
- "I'm tired of the excuses from sales and marketing."

About the sales leader:

- "We're on our second or third sales leader in a few years."
- "Do I need to replace him, or is it something else?"
- "The new VP wants a bigger team before anything changes."

In the numbers:

- The forecast gets argued about every week and the board discounts whatever survives.
- Pipeline looks fine and revenue still misses.
- Revenue grows only when the founder is in the deal.

Why Jason (the things you can say out loud)

- He fixes the reason a company isn't hitting its number. He takes the seat and owns it: operator, not advisor...he doesn't leave behind a deck and a mess.
- He fixes the whole engine, not one department: winning customers, keeping them, growing them, as one system. Three CRO seats owning all of it.
- Two-time co-founder, both companies exited. He has sat where your client sits.
- He has also sat on the private equity side of the table: commercial lead for a leadership-advisory firm's PE practice, the leadership piece of due diligence for sponsors and their portcos...can this team deliver the value creation plan?
- 130% to 205% of revenue target across engagements; 33% to 67% margin growth.
- The engagement ends. The system he builds runs without him.
- He slots in beside whatever operating system the company already runs. He doesn't replace you.

How this runs both ways

Inside every engagement I look under the hood, which means I'm often the first to know when a client needs a fractional CXO or an implementer. When that happens, I make the introduction to the right partner, and I'll share what I found along the way. For partners who expect a referral fee, that's available on request.

Making the introduction

What works best is a short three-way intro, fifteen minutes, where you frame what you're hearing and I mostly listen. A two-line email works too: the client's name, one sentence on what you're hearing, both of us copied. The first conversation with the founder is 30 minutes about their situation, never a pitch.
