REVVED FOR GROWTH Referral Partner Guide

How to spot a fit, how to make the introduction, and how you are rewarded.

The client profile that fits

- Founder-led or family-owned B2B, roughly $2M to $15M in revenue.
- Growth is not tracking to what the founder expected, despite new people, tactics, or tools.
- The founder might still be personally involved in selling, usually more than they want to be.

Phrases that signal a fit

You do not need to diagnose anything. If a client says something like the following, the introduction is worth making:

"We're not growing as fast as I expected."

"I'm tired of the excuses from sales and marketing."

"I don't know why we can't hit our targets."

"We're on our second or third sales leader in a few years."

"I'm still the best salesperson in the company, and I don't have time to sell."

How to make the introduction

The best hand-off is a short virtual intro; fifteen minutes is plenty. If calendars will not cooperate, a two-line email works too: the client's name, one sentence on what you are hearing, and both of us copied. I take it from there, and I will keep you informed at every step. Your client is never pitched in that first conversation; we discuss their situation and decide whether a revenue engine inspection is warranted or not.

The referral fee

If an introduction becomes an engagement, I offer 20% of the revenue from that client's first engagement, paid as the client pays. No cap, no fine print, and it never comes out of the client's price. If you prefer not to accept fees, credit toward reciprocal work or a straight thank-you both work too; tell me which you prefer and that is how we will run it.

What I send back your way

This runs in both directions. Inside every engagement I see under the hood, which means I am regularly the first to know when a client needs fractional help. When that happens, I make the same introduction to the right partner.

Jason Rigolli · Fractional CRO · Revved for Growth · FixYourRevenueEngine.com · jason@FixYourRevenueEngine.com