REVVED FOR GROWTH

The one seat the operating system can't fill.

The seat I take

You have the operating system: vision, an accountability chart, Rocks, a scorecard, a leadership team that actually meets. It did its job...it made the gap visible. The number still misses, and the revenue seat is the one box on the chart nobody really owns. Filling it is a different craft than installing the system. That's the seat I take: I fix the reason the company isn't hitting its number, bank a quick win inside 100 days, hand it back running.

How I work

Thirty days reading how revenue is actually produced: Pipeline, Planning, People, Performance. Where deals die. What the forecast is worth. Whether the managers coach or report. Then the two or three levers that pay back fastest, then the cadence that makes the fix durable. I slot in beside the cadence you already run...the revenue seat gets an owner, the rest stays as it is.

READ	FIX	HAND BACK
The engine read that shows where growth is really leaking, in your own scorecard numbers.	The levers in payback order: qualification, pricing realization, the renewal motion, the coaching cadence.	A revenue seat that runs without me, and a number that holds without heroics.

The founder that fits

- Founder-led or family-owned B2B, roughly $2M to $15M in revenue, running on an operating system.
- Growth stalled despite new people, new tactics, new tools...and the revenue Rock keeps rolling to next quarter.
- The stall has a shape: a funnel that leaks, accounts that quit growing, a forecast the L10 argues about, or you still in every deal.

The record

Over two decades running revenue organizations as CRO, VP Sales, and VP Operations, inside founder-led companies and alongside the people who install their operating systems. Two companies co-founded, both exited.

205%	130-205%	33-67%
of revenue target, FinTech SaaS client	of target across engagements	margin growth

What happens next

A 30-minute conversation. If it makes sense, a Revenue Engine Inspection: a structured look at how revenue is actually produced, in your own numbers. You get the report either way. The engagement, if there is one, ends with the engine running on its own...not on me.

Jason Rigolli · Fractional CRO · Revved for Growth · FixYourRevenueEngine.com · jason@FixYourRevenueEngine.com